East Gate

For 2,000 years East Gate has been the main entrance into the historic walled city of Chester.

Looking at East Gate today, in all its Georgian delicacy, it is difficult to imagine this as the main gateway to Deor – one of the most important Roman fortresses in Britain. It is far easier to picture elegant Georgian ladies and gentlemen enjoying a promenade around the Walls than marching Roman legionaries.

Although East Gate has changed dramatically over time, Eastgate Street has retained its role in the heart of Chester and is still the city's busiest thoroughfare.

↑ An artist's impression of the Roman East Gate as seen from the City Walls

Standing here 1,800 years ago you would have seen Roman legionaries, like these, patrolling at East Gate. The Romans built the original fortress walls both for defence and to symbolise their dominance over local tribes.

↑ An artist's impression of the medieval East Gate

In July 1403, after the 'Hotspur' rebellion had been defeated, King Henry IV chose Chester's East Gate to display the remains of Henry 'Hotspur' Percy, as a warning to other potential traitors. The severed heads of Sir Richard Vimesales and Sir Richard Vernon were also displayed on pikes above the battlements.

↓ Eastgate Street in the 19th century

In the 19th century Eastgate Street was a bustling thoroughfare, as this print shows. The famous East Gate Clock was added in 1899 to commemorate Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897.

BIBLE

In Reverent Remembrance of MATTHEW HERRY,
MINISTER OF THIS CONGREGATION FROM 1687 TO 1712.

His great Abilities and varied Attainments were consecrated, in unweari'd Labours, to the Highest Interests of his Fellowmen.
He was a Learned, Sagacious, and Devout Expositor of Scripture.
An attractive Teacher, a Faithful Pastor, an assiduous Evangelist.
And an eminent Example of Christian Character ripened into Spiritual Maturity by unfaltering Faith and fervent Prayer.
A Nonconformist with deep Conviction and Fidelity to Conscience.
He delighted in a Holy Generosity, and Diversity of Communion.
Neither alienated his Affection, nor restrained his Charity.
And both Churchmen and Nonconformists devoutly cherish His Memory.
Born October 18, 1662. Died June 22, 1714.

TO COMMEMORATE THE BI-CENTENARY OF HIS BIRTH,
THIS CHAPEL OF WHICH HE WAS THE FOUNDER, WAS REFRONTED
AND THE ADJACENT ALMS HOUSES REBUILT IN 1862.
